HISTORICAL NOTE

In 1869, the Board of Education established the Female and Normal High School of the City of New York. It was the first separate institution in New York City to offer girls free education beyond the eight grammar school grades. The initial three-year curriculum offered enrollees instruction in the liberal arts and in pedagogy. In April of 1870, the name of the school was changed to the Normal College of the City of New York.

In 1903, the course of study of the Normal College consisted of four years of high school and three years of college. The high school component of the College became known as the Normal College High School and was chartered by the New York State Board of Regents. Between 1903 and 1913 the high school was under the supervision of a college committee chaired by Professor Hill of the Physics Department.

In 1913, Dr. Grace B. Beach, Chair of the high school's Department of Physics, became the school's first principal. Dr. Beach was succeeded in 1920 by Dr. Louisa M. Webster; she was subsequently succeeded by Dr. Jean F. Brown in 1934.

One of the chief aims of the high school was to prepare students for college. An added aim of the school was to serve as a training ground for Hunter College students who intended to teach in the secondary schools of New York City. Teacher training opportunities were greatly enhanced in the high school when grades seven and eight were transferred from the Hunter College Elementary School in 1934. In 1955, the Hunter College High School was officially designated as a laboratory school for the education of intellectually gifted girls. In 1974, boys were admitted to the school for the first time.

Since 1977, the Hunter College Campus Schools (Elementary and High School) have shared the same facility on east 94th Street and Park Avenue. Hunter College High School is a publicly funded tuition free institution. It is chartered by the Board of Trustees of City University of New York and administered by Hunter College. In an unorthodox fashion HCHS is structured around a six-year program, from seventh through twelfth grades, with selected students gaining access to the school in the beginning of the seventh grade. Successful passage of an admissions exam is required at the end of an applicant's sixth grade year for admittance to the school.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Hunter College High School Collection highlights the establishment and growth of a highly prestigious high school in New York City from 1911 to 2010. The strengths of the collection are the annual reports, general reports and studies, programs and scripts, and publications. The annual reports are key sources of information because they document the activities and events, news, programs, and general accomplishments of the school from 1911-1917, and 1929 -1951. Publications like Alum Notes, Argus, Marianne, What's What, and The Observer have served as a platform for the voices of the student body throughout the 20th Century. Researchers of high school education in New York City should find this collection to be appealing, informative, and stimulating.
